Out Of Selection

Out Of Selection is a musical podcast exploring the personal and unexpected sides of DJs and selectors.

Away from the music they usually play in clubs, festivals and dancefloors, the show invites DJs to share tracks they would rarely, or never, play in that context — music that belongs to another part of their lives.

These selections can come from anywhere: music they grew up listening to with their parents, records they put on when they need to relax, songs associated with difficult moments, music they share with friends over dinner, or simply tracks that reveal a side of their taste that rarely finds its way into their usual sets.

For each episode, DJs are invited to step outside their usual selection and share the music they listen to when there is no dancefloor to please, no energy to maintain and no expectations to meet.

Out Of Selection is a space for personal, intimate and unexpected musical choices — a place where DJs can step away from their usual identity and simply share the music they love.

Visual Identity

The visual identity of Out Of Selection is fairly simple. It consists of a single image connected to a memory from the artist's childhood or teenage years, or an object, texture, or photograph that evokes a personal connection to music.

The image can also be a photograph of the artist, but preferably an old photograph from their childhood or teenage years, rather than a contemporary artist portrait. The visual identity should remain focused on personal memories.
